Boy bullied on Pink Shirt Day: Mom

Anti-bullying initiative. Talk is cheap, says woman whose son faced schoolyard abuse

Jessica's son dressed up in bright colours before heading off to Banff Trail School last week for Pink Shirt Day, an international occasion where students and staff alike take a stand against bullying.

But during the lunch break, Jessica said, seven kids swarmed her son and one repeatedly struck him. He was also pushed into a puddle of ice water, she said, with no one standing up to defend him.

"The teacher who was on duty didn't see what happened," said Jessica, whom Metro has agreed to identify only by first name to protect her son's identity.

More concerning to Jessica, who is a private-school teacher herself, was what she described as a lack of follow-up from administrators.

"The reaction was 'Oh, well this boy — the ringleader, if you want to call him that — we don't think he's that kind of person,'" she said.

Banff Trail principal Marguerite Haase wouldn't delve into the specifics of what she described as a "complex" incident, but said her school takes student safety seriously.

"Will there be confrontations and some difficult times? Sure," Haase said, but adding: "Bullying is deeper than that."

She said students have also had classes devoted to tactics around dealing with bullying.

But Jessica said school leaders need to do more than just talk about bullying.

"It's very easy to just talk about things but if there's not action behind it then it's pretty empty and meaningless," she said.

Suites. New bylaw would distinguish in-house, secondary

Calgary's proposed bylaw that would allow secondary suites in four inner-city wards would draw a distinction between suites built within a home and those built in a backyard, according to city planners.

In-house suites would be "permitted uses" under the terms of the new bylaw, city planner Lesley Kalmakoff said Sunday, meaning, in effect, they would automatically be allowed provided they "meet the rules of the land-use bylaw."

By contrast, backyard suites — built either as part of a garage or as a standalone "garden suite" — would be a "discretionary use," meaning city planners could refuse them on a case-by-case basis if specific conditions aren't met.

"The reason is because with backyard suites, we see issues like overshadowing or privacy concerns," Kalmakoff said.

The Calgary Planning Commission is to review the proposed bylaw to more broadly allow secondary suites in Wards 7, 8, 9 and 11 on March 26. If approved there, the bylaw would then go to city council in May for a public hearing and vote.

On Sunday, Coun. Druh Farrell, who initially proposed the idea last May, said council continues to mire citizens in "red tape" and spend inordinate amounts of time approving suites "one by one."

"At the last council meeting, there were four suite applications and we approved all four," she said. "Why does council need to approve each one?"

Doc to reveal Calgary's lost link to the Beatles

Some Other Guys: The Story of the Big Three. Local guitar teacher's rock 'n' roll past is subject of film

calgary@metronews.ca

A few years ago, Calgary guitar teacher Brian Griffiths told a student about tearing up the stage with the Beatles in the 1960s. The student's mother approached Griffiths months later, saying, "You know, I really don't care — but he still thinks that you actually knew the Beatles."

Griffiths didn't correct her, but the woman underestimated her son's coach.

Griffiths was the guitarist for the Big Three, one of the most popular bands in England, sharing the stage, a manager and many pints with John, Paul, George and Ringo.

Now, Calgary filmmaker Todd Kipp is turning the Big Three's untold story into a feature-length documentary called Some Other Guys: The Story of the Big Three.

"I'd never even heard of the Big Three before 2013," said Kipp. "It's just mind-blowing, even Rolling Stone Magazine said the Beatles were in their shadow, and they were the best band out there — so how come no one here knows who they are?"

The trio was expected to make it to the big leagues, but they split up in 1963 — just missing the British Invasion, which likely would have brought them notoriety across the ocean. "Musically, we were (at the top), anyone in Liverpool would tell you that," said Griffiths. "But we were just too wild to stay together."

Filming began last year, when Griffiths, Kipp and the crew headed back to the U.K. and reunited with the bandmates Griffiths hadn't seen in 51 years. The team is currently crowdfunding out of InvestYYC for their next trip to Europe to interview Paul McCartney and finish telling the band's story.

"People don't know about this whole other side of musical history, because they've never been given a voice to join the conversation," said Kipp. "It's incredible because Brian's been right here in Silver Springs all along."

The history

- The band's most recognized lineup was Brian Griffiths on guitar, Johnny Gustafson on bass and Johnny Hutchison on drums.
- The band split up in 1963.

Continued existence of tuition cap 'looks very grim' for Alberta students

Education. Prentice government has ruled out changes to course fee regulations

jeremy.nola@metronews.ca

If Alberta tosses out its tuition cap system, the provincial government will compensate for chronic underfunding by hitting students hard in the pocketbook, warn students to the east, where no such course cost regulations exist.

In Saskatchewan, the average undergraduate tuition has shot up 22.6 per cent since 2010-11, the largest growth seen in any province.

Devon Peters, president of the University of Regina Students' Union, said in real dollars it's about an additional $150 to $200 per tacked on to the bill of each student annually. He noted that Saskatchewan was once under a tuition freeze, meaning it was in a better "starting position," but now the $6,659 his members fork over annually is second only to Ontario, where students paid $7,539 for schooling this year.

"The increase has been so high, largely, because the government has consistently underfunded universities," Peters said in an interview. "Every year, a university of any size needs roughly three or four per cent in operating fund increase to continue increasing at the rate of its staff cost. When our university is underfunded by the government, they have to look to alternative revenue streams or they have to reduce staff."

Peters was already aware of swirling speculation in Alberta of potential changes to the hardline tuition cap, which currently restricts increases to the rate of inflation — this year, the maximum bump-up allowed is 2.2 per cent.

Metro was first to report about the possible removal of the tuition cap and Premier Jim Prentice didn't rule out changes to how schools are funded.

"What we're searching for is to have the best education system, the best universities and colleges and we need to make sure we have a sustainable revenue model to do that and that's going to require all of us to share some part of the responsibility," Prentice told reporters.

Peters said he foresees a Saskatchewan-like scenario playing out in Alberta in the years ahead, one that sees students compensate for funding shortfalls.

"It looks very grim for students in your province," he said.

But Russell Isinger, registrar at the University of Saskatchewan, said schools in the province still look at comparability of other Canadian tuition rates and other factors before hiking costs. This year, the increase to students will be about 2.4 per cent, he said.

"We are quite independent from the government, so we view tuition as the purview of the board governors of the institution, so we set tuition," he said.

Politics. Notley fires up NDP base with speech

Alberta's NDP leader officially got her party's backing Sunday and launched into an election-style speech taking aim at the Progressive Conservative government.

Rachel Notley, was acclaimed as her party's candidate in her riding of Edmonton — Strathcona. Notley said the election would be about choosing who bears the pain for oil's downturn.

"While our province and our people have changed this PC government has not. They still refuse to put ordinary Alberta families ahead of their corporate friends," she said to an enthusiastic room of supporters. "Fairness has not been the guiding principle of this government up to now and we think that should be the ballot question."

Notley said she expects the campaign will begin soon and argued her party was the most prepared to take on the Tories.

Wild horses auctioned in Innisfail – and saved from slaughterhouse

More than a dozen wild Alberta horses that were auctioned off over the weekend have been saved from the slaughterhouse.

The Innisfail Auction Market says it made sure the 14 animals, which were among 33 wild horses captured in the Ghost River area west of Calgary last month, were sold only to ranchers, farmers or private individuals.

The rest were in the care of rescuers with the hope they will eventually be adopted.

Bob Henderson of the Wild Horses of Alberta Society had feared the animals that went to auction would end up as meat, noting older wild horses are difficult to tame.

The organization works with the Alberta government to manage its wild horse population, which the province says damages grasslands used for livestock grazing and by wildlife such as elk.

The government says the horses are descendants of domestic animals used in logging and mining operations in the early 1900s.

One buyer observing the horses at the auction said some didn't appear to be wild, noting a few had brands and one was a gelding.

The purchase prices for the horses ranged between $500 and $800, with the exception of a stud horse which fetched $1,650.

Mixed-use on the rise

Beltline. City of Calgary and developers are eyeing large-scale, mixed-use projects as compared to some other cities.

Darrell Sargent, a co-ordinator of citywide and regional strategies within the city's planning department, said the first phase of that study is now nearly complete. It involves taking an inventory of all the city's current retail stores, something that "has never been done before," he said.

The second phase will involve developing a new retail strategy for the city as a whole, Sargent added, which will be broader than simply encouraging more mixed-use developments.

Still, he said: "Mount Royal West is a good example of a mixed-use development and it is the type of thing that we're looking for."

Woolley said he's met with a half-dozen developers recently who are planning mixed-use projects in the Beltline area, and most are eyeing "urban grocers" as the retail component — something he's not sure will actually come to fruition in each case.

"It's a sexy sell but there's only a defined market for it," Woolley said. "Urban grocer sounds really great but then it might be like ... 'Oh, we couldn't sign one so now we're getting a Shoppers Drug Mart.'"

ROBSON
robson.fletcher@metronews.ca

Calgary is starting to see more developments that combine a major retailer with a large-scale residential development, says a core-area city councillor, pointing to a new Beltline project involving more than 200 condo units to be built above a supermarket.

"I used to joke, like five or 10 years ago, that Calgary's idea of multi-use was ... a bunch of dentists on top of a Shoppers Drug Mart," said Coun. Evan Woolley, adding he was encouraged to see city planners recently approve Mount Royal West, a major residential/commercial development in the 900 block of 16 Avenue SW.

It was about a year and a half ago that city council agreed to spend $375,000 to, in part, look into why Calgary sees relatively few large-scale retail developments that are "more than one thing."

Engineering a better future for young girls

Outreach program.

Special U of T science class for Grade 3 pupils all part of push to make future workplace more gender-split and equal

Groups of students huddle around desks at a university campus as the instructor gives out a quick overview of the job at hand: Build a crane, create an electromagnet and pick up metal.

Work begins in earnest with some of the students building their contraptions with wheels "for better transportation" while others build them for strength.

But these are not university students. They are Grade 3 and Grade 4 students — about half of them girls — who like to spend a few hours on the weekend building "stuff" and learning about science.

"I've been building stuff a long time," said eight-year-old Yashu Tennen. "In our school we're building bridges out of Popsicle sticks."

Does she want to be an engineer or scientist when she grows up?

"I don't know. I want to be many things," she said.

The class is part of an outreach program at the University of Toronto designed to help break gender, financial and racial barriers. The university hopes girls like Yashu will eventually enter an engineering program.

Many other universities across the country offer similar programs to encourage women to get into the fields of science, technology, engineering and math.

York University, for example, runs all-girl courses that teach science through superheroes.

Later this week, the university is expected to launch the Lassonde 50:50 Challenge — an initiative that aims to achieve an equal gender-split enrolment at its Lassonde engineering school.

The gender divide in professions such as engineering and computer sciences is a startling problem in Canada. According to Engineers Canada, about 88 per cent of engineers are men.

Those numbers are slowly changing because of programs such as these, according to Jennifer Flanagan, the CEO of Actua — an Ottawa-based charity that promotes science to children, especially girls.

"They can experiment, tinker and that kind of environment is really conducive to boosting their confidence," Flanagan said of the programs, which include all-girl science classes. They have been around for two decades, she said, but they've become more popular in recent years.

Last September, the first-year undergraduate engineering class at the University of Toronto saw 365 women, a 25 per cent increase from the year before.

A report from Engineers Canada shows just 18.3 per cent of undergraduate engineering degrees were awarded to women across the country in 2013, up slightly from 17.6 per cent in 2009.

Montreal. Massage parlour debate rolls on as business endures despite crackdown

One year after the mayor promised to crack down on erotic massage parlours, Montreal still doesn't know what it's going to do with the hundreds of establishments operating right across the city.

City officials are still debating how to tackle the issue of erotic parlours, many of which are open 24/7 and illegally employ women who have sex with men in the massage rooms.

Without a clear policy, community groups and massage parlour owners say the police are letting the de-facto brothels operate under a tacit agreement: Don't hire minors, don't force women to do anything they don't want to do, and keep organized crime out of it.

Russia. Demonstrators in Moscow march and chant to mourn murdered opposition leader Boris Nemtsov Carrying flowers, portraits and signs that said, "I am not afraid," tens of thousands of people somberly marched Sunday in Moscow to mourn opposition politician Boris Nemtsov, whose slaying on the streets of the capital has shaken Russia's beleaguered opposition.

The mourners marched to the bridge near the Kremlin where Nemtsov was gunned down shortly before midnight Friday. Chanting "We'll not forget, we'll not forgive" and waving Russian flags, the crowd filled the road along the Moscow River embankment.

'Political murders'

Another mourning march for Nemtsov was held earlier Sunday in St. Petersburg, drawing what police estimated was 6,000 people.

- Nelly Prusskaya, a 66-year-old doctor, said she came to pay her respects to Nemtsov. "I also came to say that I'm against the war in Ukraine.... I'm against political murders."

Many tied black ribbons to railings along the way. The mood was sombre. No one has been arrested in Nemtsov's killing, and investigators said they are looking into several possible motives.

Blackberry, Samsung deepen partnership

Telecoms. Companies pursue cellphone security to appeal to private-sector customers

BlackBerry Ltd. (TSX:BB) is bulking up its security partnership with Samsung Electronics in an effort to attract more business customers.

The Waterloo, Ont.-based smartphone company says it has locked in a new agreement that will integrate more of its services into Samsung Knox, the South Korean company's mobile security platform.

The pact is the latest in a growing relationship between BlackBerry and Samsung, once smartphone industry rivals who are now combining some of their efforts to bolster a competitive stance against Apple Inc., which is making its own solo push into the business community — known within the industry as enterprise users.

BlackBerry chief executive John Chen said his company brings additional security features to the table that Samsung needed to improve its slate of software.

"Samsung is a consumer company and they intended to get into the enterprise space," Chen said on a recent conference call with reporters.

"Enterprise needs a lot more than what the Knox offered."

The joint announcement comes just before the start of the Mobile World Congress trade fair in Barcelona, Spain on Monday.

BlackBerry's WorkLife allows businesses to supply phones to their employees, but create a virtual divide within the device that allows it to operate as if it were two separate phones.

SecuSuite software adds an extra level of security to the phone with encryption technology that makes voice and text communication "virtually tap-proof," BlackBerry said. The service will be available on Samsung Knox this fall.

Lobster prices hold despite demand

Canadian lobster exports to Asia are growing, but Bernie Berry of the Coldwater Lobster Association said prices are not yet reflecting the increased Asian demand.

CALGARY NIMBYS ARE OUT OF CONTROL

In one community, NIMBYs are opposing opening a school for special needs students. In another area they're up in arms over skateparks

CALGARY
Jeremy Klaszus

Are schools and sports facilities good for neighbourhoods — or bad?

Do these amenities drive property values up — or down?

Forgive me if I'm a little confused on these points. If you've been following local news in Calgary, you might be, too. Let's recap.

In Bridgeland, a quiet school for special needs kids outgrows its building and plans a move into Varsity. But many residents in the new community are incredulous, suing the Calgary Board of Education for alleged "diminution" of their property values.

Meanwhile, also in Bridgeland, a private school has outgrown its space in the Bridgeland School building and plans to sell the property to a condo developer. There, too, many residents are opposed, saying that losing the school will worsen the neighbourhood, diminish their privacy and harm property values. So which one is it? Surely we're not expected to believe that gaining a school hurts property values and losing a school hurts property values, too.

Meanwhile, in 2014, the city announces small new skateparks for eight communities. Rejoicing ensues, for obvious reasons.

"Skateparks today are more than ramps and concrete blocks," enthuses one of the recipient communities on its website (Chinook Park/Kelvin Grove/Eagle Ridge). "Current skatepark designs incorporate landscape architecture, are more organic, and esthetically pleasing. They can create environments for positive neighbourhood interaction and less crime. Recreational activities directly contribute to safe and vibrant communities."

Other community associations, including Edgemont, show similar enthusiasm. But some Edgemont residents don't like the location, and band together to protest.

They circulate a petition portraying the skatepark as an "eyesore" that will afflict the community with various disturbances — all of this before they have seen the park's proposed design. (Which, it must be noted, features a nifty "Nose Hill bump" and other design elements reflecting the local geography. How cool is that?)

They raise enough fuss that the city puts the project on hold to find a new location.

The absurdity doesn't end there. Calgary Herald columnist Naomi Lakritz argued last week that the Edgemont skatepark would be hell on wheels because of the "irritating clack-clack, clack-clack, clack-clack" of those darn ollieing teenagers, along with their

"foul language."

No such argument would be complete without a reference to declining property values. Sure enough, Lakritz delivered: Property values "would likely be driven down" by the influx of profane kickflipping youth. Yes, yes, we get it already: Any change that occurs in this city, from schools to skateparks, ruins the neighbourhood and sinks property values. There's a pattern here.

In all of the above cases, residents will say they are not NIMBYists. They are not against development X. They are just against it in this particular location. "I don't want this in my back yard, but it would be perfect over there!"

This is the very definition of NIMBY.

And when you see people fighting off amenities that other communities spend years trying to obtain, you know NIMBYism has truly run amok.

Upcoming

Big Taste Foodie Fest

With the approaching arrival of spring comes a new menu of events, and one of the most appetizing has to be The Big Taste Foodie Festival. Running from March 6 to 15, the event will feature more than 70 restaurants for patrons to choose from. With eats from some of the city's best-known chefs, the event will surely be a treat for those with even the most experienced taste buds. Over the course of the 10-day event, Calgary residents will have the opportunity to attend a number of food-focused affairs, including the Downtown Food Chef Collaboration on March 7 or a Barcelona Tavern Spanish Lunch on March 9. Tickets for each event range from free to $110, and several events have already sold out. For more, visit calgary-downtown.ca. METRO

De Grood preliminary hearing starts

The preliminary hearing for the man charged in the worst mass killing in Calgary's history is set to start today, March 2. Matthew de Grood, the son of a veteran Calgary police officer, is charged with first-degree murder in the death of five young people who were celebrating the end of the University of Calgary's winter semester at a house party in April 2014. Police were called to an address in the 100 block of Butler Crescent NW at around 1:30 a.m. on April 15. When they arrived, they found three people dead on scene; two others would die later in hospital. The preliminary hearing will occur at Calgary's Court Centre and is expected to run until at least March 6. METRO

Kid Rock's instagram abuzz

Kid Rock's recent comments about Beyoncé drew the ire of her fans. GETTY IMAGES

Kid Rock is learning the hard way that you do not want to cross Beyoncé — or her legion of fans. Rock had some pretty unkind things to say about the Single Ladies singer's musical legacy and physical attractiveness during a rant to Rolling Stone: "Beyoncé, to me, doesn't have a f—ing Purple Rain, but she's the biggest thing on Earth," he says. "How can you be that big without at least one Sweet Home Alabama or Old Time Rock & Roll? People are like, 'Beyoncé's hot. Got a nice f—ing ass.' I'm like, 'Cool, I like skinny white chicks with big (breasts).' Doesn't really f—ing do much for me." Charming.

So what did Beyoncé's fans do? The 'Beyhive' descended on Rock's Instagram account and flooded his recent photos with countless comments and bee emojis. It's kind of beautiful, but still probably more attention than Rock deserves.

Biebs parties like it's his 21st birthday

Look out world, Canada's crown prince of obnoxiousness is really, truly not a kid anymore. Justin Bieber celebrated his 21st birthday over the weekend with numerous exuberant Twitter updates. Oh, and a huge house party, filled with sprinklers and 50 Cent hits, if the brief video he posted is any indication. Now that he's come of age, Bieber will have to find some new reason to get kicked out of U.S. nightclubs, but I'm sure he'll think of something. He's very resourceful.

'Nothing strange' about ScarJo kiss

So that super-creepy photo of John Travolta grabbing and kissing Scarlett Johansson on the red carpet? Well, Johansson herself has heard what you've been saying about it and she wants you all to knock it off.

"There is nothing strange, creepy or inappropriate about John Travolta," she tells the Associated Press. "The image that is circulating is an unfortunate still-frame from a live-action encounter that was very sweet and totally welcome. That still photo does not reflect what preceded and followed if you see the moment live ... I haven't seen John in some years and it is always a pleasure to be greeted by him."

If you say so.

The advantage of an allowance

Money smarts.

Giving kids their own dollars to spend and save teaches them important lessons

GAIL VAZ-OXLADE
Gail blogs daily at gailvazoxlade.com

It's one of the universal truths about kids: Get them in a store and they are transformed into beggars as persistent as any telemarketer. Every shopping trip leads to upturned faces and pleas of, "Mom, can I have this?"

We like to blame the commercials on television, or over-indulgent parents, or a sense of entitlement never before seen because of rampant consumerism. But maybe the real culprits are habit and routine.

When was the last time you went into a store without buying something?

In our hectic, gotta-get-it-done lives, we seldom take the time to window shop or browse. Almost every store entry ends in a purchase. Maybe it's only natural that children copy our retail routines.

When everything is magically acquired by swiping a card and pushing some buttons, how are kids supposed to understand that there isn't an endless fountain of purchasing power? And since it's sometimes easier just to give in to our kids' all-too-frequent demands than to explain the big picture, children learn the wrong lessons.

Money management is a concrete skill and kids need access to money to learn how to manage it. ISTOCK

We can all agree that children who are shown how to be responsible about money early on will be much more likely to stay in good financial shape down the road. But how do you get started?

First, you've got to give 'em some money. Before children can learn to manage money they need to be able to get their hands on the stuff. The debate about allowance — how much children should receive and who should manage it — rages. But the reality is that kids can't learn about money if they have no money to work with. Money

Allowance basics

Look at an allowance as having three parts:

- The part to be saved, the part to be shared, and the part to be spent.
- This third part can be further broken down into two parts: the spending kids want to be able to do on a whim, and the spending they intend to do based on specific expenses and expressly stated goals.

- Saving, sharing and planned spending are all ideas that have to be introduced, practised and reinforced.

management is a concrete skill. Yes, there are some abstract concepts you'll eventually have to cover — like compound interest — but it all starts with nickels, dimes, quarters, loonies and toonies.

I define an allowance as the money you normally spend on your kid put in your child's hands so he or she can learn to manage it. Given regularly, an allowance not only provides kids with the bucks they need to experiment with saving and spending, it also gives them the responsibility for keeping their money safe and using it wisely. Over time, even a modest allowance will get kids thinking about the value of money and how to make their dollars go further.

The alternative to an allowance, and a trap for most parents, is the dole system. That's when your kid asks for some cash and you dole it out. Since the dole system has no limit, there is no reason for a child to set priorities or make a decision on relative value.

If you're currently on the dole system and don't fully appreciate what it's costing you, consider keeping track of all money you hand over to your kid in a month. You may be surprised at how large his allowance is!

The amount you give your child will depend on how much you can afford, your child's age, and what you expect your child to do with her allowance.

Younger children need less money. If you expect older children to buy some of their own clothes, pay for their own haircuts and plan for big-ticket buys such as camp or car insurance, you'll have to figure out what each of those things costs.

You're the best judge of the amount that will be most appropriate for your child.

Kick off March with this fresh and easy dinner that rivals any restaurant entree.

Chicken is one of the most versatile proteins to serve. You can enjoy it as an informal everyday meal or jazz it up like what I've done here. The chicken doesn't need to be marinated or seasoned since there is so much flavour in the topping.

The chicken is lightly breaded and sautéed in a small amount of oil. The sautéed spinach and onions are the perfect match with the feta, tomatoes and olives, giving it a Greek infusion of flavours.

Feel free to substitute the spinach for baby kale and use any other firm cheese such as grated Parmesan, Asiago or crumbled goat cheese. I love to serve this meal with a Greek or Caprese salad.

Directions

1. Mix egg and milk on a large plate. On a separate plate, mix bread crumbs and Parmesan. Dip chicken in egg mixture, then bread crumbs.

2. Spray a large skillet with vegetable spray and add 2 tsp vegetable oil. On medium heat, sauté chicken pieces until cooked through, about 5-8 minutes. Set aside.

3. In another large skillet, add remaining 2 tsp vegetable oil and onions, garlic and basil. Sauté for 3 minutes until onions are softened.

4. Add whole tomatoes and sauté just until tomatoes begin to blister. Add spinach and sauté just until spinach starts to wilt.

5. Spread spinach mixture over chicken. Sprinkle with olives and feta.

Paralympian talks tackling adversity

Naval veteran Brad Snyder distinctly recalls the moment he realized that his life would never be the same.

It was just after he was wounded during an IED attack in Afghanistan with injuries that would leave him permanently blind. "I remember waking up in the hospital and thinking 'when I dream I can see, I can walk around just fine. But when I wake up, it's dark again.'"

During his recovery, a nurse asked Snyder if he liked sports and suggested that he consider training for the Paralympics. A member of the swim team during his time at the Naval Academy, Snyder decided to return to the sport and ended up winning two golds and one silver for the United States during the 2012 Paralympic Games in London. While most will not have to recover from setbacks as extreme as Snyder's, he stresses that there are universal lessons to be learned from his experiences. We caught up with Snyder shortly after a recent speech he made at New York University as part of Deloitte's "Road Show with Team USA."

Try not to think of the past: "Dwelling on the negatives, dwelling on the stress, dwelling on the uncertainty — none of these are going to get you anywhere," says Snyder. "Focus on the positives, focus on personal development, focus on the upsides."

Accept that unfair things happen: "Crappy things are going to happen to everyone," Snyder points out. "We're all going to face adversity. Embrace your circumstances and realize that you can make things change."

Olympian Evan Lysacek is quick to say that he was never the best skater on the ice.

"I felt that I was never as naturally talented or, overall, as good as my competitors," the 29-year-old tells us.

"But I always felt that if I could outwork them, then I could outperform them."

That hard work paid off for the American figure skater in 2010, when he took home the gold medal at the Vancouver Olympics.

Along with Paralympic swimmer Brad Snyder, Lysacek has been touring college campuses across the country as part of Deloitte's Road Show with Team USA. The two athletes have been speaking about their career journeys and explaining to students how they carved a path to success.

We caught up with Lysacek after his recent appearance at New York University and asked him for his tips on how ambitious readers can achieve their career goals.

Don't let anxiety derail you

Lysacek often speaks of the anxiety that temporarily threw him off during his routine in the Vancouver trials. Since then, he's come up with several ways to manage his anxiety but says things aren't perfect. "It's constantly evolving," he says. "It's like chasing a moving target. But for me, as much as I can bring the preparation in to manage the stress and anxiety, I do it."

Be willing to change course

After skating for more than half his life, Lysacek recently embarked on a new career in the real estate industry.

"I'm learning a new indus-

Maintain your focus

Competing as a teen, Lysacek admits that he did have moments where he wished that he could have hung out with friends instead of constantly heading to the rink.

- "It's an abnormal life," he admits. "But I'm sure that there are a lot of fields where that same sacrifice and discipline come in."

try and taking on as much responsibility as I can," he says. "And I'm just trying to bring a lot of the ideals that I learned in my first chapter into this."

But, he adds, he hasn't left the skating life behind and will be going on tour again in March.

Balancing the two worlds has been interesting. "I'm very sore all of the time. I'm thinking about contracts, leasing, square footage while also trying to think about skating technique," he says.

NHL

Rangers trade for all-star Yandle

The New York Rangers acquired a big piece in their push for another deep play-off run, picking up all-star defenceman Keith Yandle in a trade with the Arizona Coyotes on Sunday.

The Rangers lost to the Los Angeles Kings in the Stanley Cup Finals last season and didn't wait until Monday's trade deadline to make a big move for this year's run.

The 28-year-old Yandle has been one of the NHL's best offensive-minded defencemen, a four-time All-Star who has led the Coyotes in scoring the past three seasons. He has 41 points in 63 games this season and has been the anchor of Arizona's power play unit.

Jagr as advertised for Panthers

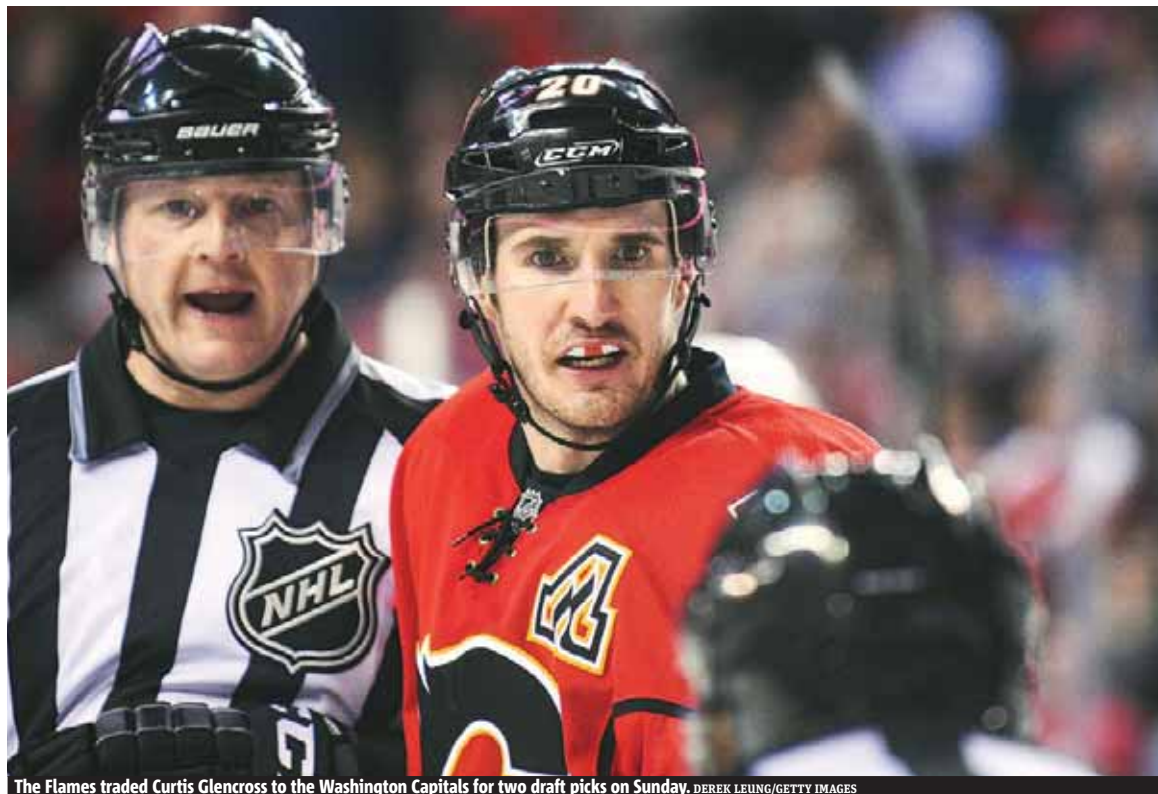

Jaromir Jagr and the Florida Panthers have been together for two games, and it's working out quite well for each side.

Jagr had a goal and an assist, and the Panthers beat the Tampa Bay Lightning 4-3 on Sunday.

Aaron Ekblad, Brad Boyes and Aleksander Barkov also scored for the Panthers (28-22-13). Al Montoya made 20 saves, and Jonathan Huberdeau had three assists.

Jagr, who was acquired in a trade with New Jersey on Thursday for two draft picks, moved into a tie with Phil Esposito for fifth on the NHL list with 717 career goals.

NHL. Flames trade winger to Capitals for pair of draft picks

Despite being in the playoff picture, the Calgary Flames traded pending-free-agent winger Curtis Glencross to the Washington Capitals for second- and third-round picks.

The 32-year-old found out he was dealt at the Flames' practice Sunday in Philadelphia.

"As tough as it is to say goodbye to everyone in Calgary and the fans — I've had such great support over the years — I'm excited for a new start," Glencross told reporters in Philadelphia prior to joining his new team in Washington.

Glencross has nine goals and 19 assists in 53 games this season for Calgary, which is three points out of the second wild-card spot in the Western Conference.

Flames general manager Brad Treliving said it was tough to trade Glencross, who played seven seasons in with the Flames and was active in the community in Calgary.

But the return — two picks in the talent-rich 2015 draft — was too much to pass up.

"I think I've been consistent in talking about the need to continue to build our base," Treliving told reporters in Philadelphia. "To build our prospect base, to build the asset base, and I think this is a significant return. A second-round and third-round pick are good assets, and I think they're heightened in a draft like this."

Washington receives a hard-nosed veteran forward that can help the Capitals in their push towards the playoffs.

Washington holds the top wild-card spot in the Eastern Conference.

"Curtis is a player we coveted and we are pleased that he decided to waive his no-trade clause to join our team," Capitals general manager Brian MacLellan said in a statement.

"We felt we needed to get deeper and more experienced at the forward position. Curtis plays important minutes and his presence on-and-off the ice will benefit our young forwards."

Glencross has a cap hit of $2.55 million US in the final year of his contract.

The third-rounder is Washington's, even though the Capitals also have Buffalo's pick from a 2014 trade.

Horoscopes by Sally Brompton

Aries

March 21 - April 20

An older friend or family member will give you some invaluable advice. You may be doing well at the moment but if you are willing to learn you will soon be doing even better.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

Don't worry if others say you don't take enough risks. If you follow your instincts over the coming week you will go much further than your critics.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

You will be eager to do favours, but don't force yourself on those who have not asked you to help. Some people prefer to suffer in silence.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

Something you value will go out of your life today. But you know you need to make room for the even better things coming your way very soon.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

Your opinion about someone you work or do business with will change dramatically today. Talk to them and get to know them better — it could be the start of a beautiful friendship.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

Not even a Virgo knows all the answers. What you discover today is sure to take you by surprise. How many other issues do you know less about than you imagined?

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

Don't keep your schemes and dreams to yourself: they are big enough for everyone to share in.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

If you need to get back on good terms with a loved one or a relative now is the time. Just let them know your recent disagreement is well and truly forgotten.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

You will have to deal with someone who hates to take risks. According to the planets you will need this individual's help in the near future, so be nice — or at least pretend.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

You will discover something about a friend that makes you understand why they have been behaving so strangely. Keep what you find to yourself.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

You need to make peace with someone you fell out with a week or two ago. Get over your disagreement and focus on what is important.

Pisces

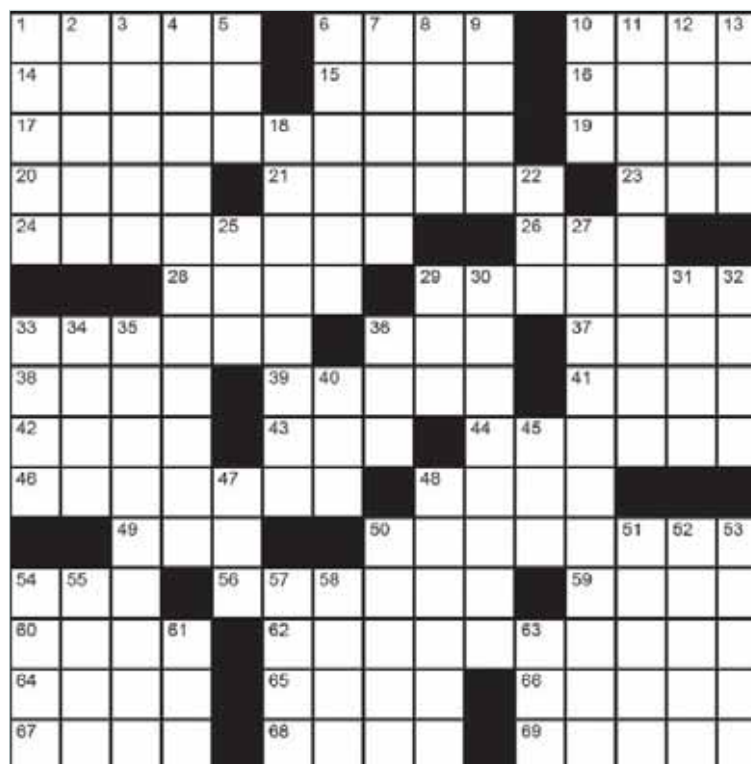

Feb. 20 - March 20

You need to reveal more of your feelings. Others don't know how to take you because you have been wearing your deadpan face for so long they fear it might now be for real. It's not, so get rid of it.
